In October 2008, after being sued by networks and studios, Machinima began to add pre-roll and watermarks to videos to make it clear that they are videos submitted by individuals. The website is part of Machinima, Inc., a Los Angeles, California based company. Machinima's primary function is to post user-submitted content. The videos may be created by amateurs, professionals or even by industry professionals such as sound and visual effects specialists, writers and other creative professionals, and additional members of a community centered around gaming. The site aggregates content from creators and provides tools for this. Machinima claims to have over 30,000 videos on the site, and there are over 100 million views per month. The website also incorporates original video games (TV shows and movies based on videogames) into its user-generated content. Machinima has been blocked by the Australian government from being available on the country's internet service providers, and has been banned in South Korea. History Machinima was launched on November 14, 2006 by Joshua Sternin who had worked with Jason Citron in creating games for JibJab. Sternin said that he hoped that Machinima would be a place for people to share their own video of games and that he wanted it to be "accessible for people who wanted to get into gaming." Machinima does not make original games as was the goal for Machinima because Sternin did
