Only platforms with high workloads can reliably provide a good service. If you see your reputation suffer, perhaps you need to look at your peers more carefully. In our case, the drop was due to a bad transaction that was recovered. We never did figure out the root cause, but we'd actually been encountering glitches on the Ethereum blockchain since the release of the second DAO hardfork [theDAO2] (albeit in lesser amounts). The transaction was in our own stablecoin, so it was a little more complex, but the principles are the same. Many EOS block producers have had similar experiences: - [9/12/2018.] [@ethereumproducers] reports that one of EOS's validators is currently suffering from repeated outages and may have to be downgraded. - [11/27/2018.] [@eosnetwork] reports a similar experience for a different EOS validator. - [7/25/2019.] [@eosnetwork] reports a similar experience for a different EOS block producer. ![source-downtime.png]{width="\linewidth"} While most block producers were not experiencing outages at this time, this is not to say that they haven't been. In fact, we haven't observed a single service that is always available, as shown in. While these data are sparse, they do tend to exhibit a daily trend: usually one or more services are unavailable for an average of 2.8 days a week. While this is mostly a bad thing for the EOS Network, sometimes outages can have positive effects. For example, if we are able to discern the root cause of the problem, we might be able to learn something. For 2d92ce491b
