Cameraman Jerry Carr posted the heartwarming scene in a video on Facebook. The incident occurred at Northwest Marine Science Center on Saturday when a woman called 911 to report that her missing 5-year-old daughter had wandered away from a park near the aquarium. The sound of the helicopter could be heard and a police negotiator contacted the girl on a cell phone. Once the helicopter got closer to the park, the girl was seen running toward the chopper. The child was then hoisted into the air by medics and the helicopter pilot and landed near the aquarium. She was then loaded onto a gurney and rushed into an ambulance. In the video, Carr can be seen in a chopper while the boy and girl are transported on gurneys to an ambulance. "I couldn't believe it," Carr said. "She was still screaming. That was crazy. That was amazing to see her happy again," he added. The girl's parents have not been identified. The family was taken to a local hospital for observation. Carr said he has been overwhelmed by the response to the video on Reddit and other websites. "I don't think anyone expected it to go viral like this," he said.
