Q: How to programmatically pass array of values from PowerShell to C# Hi I'm new to PowerShell and I have a requirement to use PowerShell to pass an array of values into C# from PowerShell. Below is an example of the PowerShell code I have. `$sql = "select * from Table"; $command = New-Object System.Data.SqlClient.SqlCommand; $command.CommandText = $sql; $command.Connection = $sqlConnection; $command.CommandTimeout = 500; $reader = $command.ExecuteReader(); while ($reader.Read()) { $serial = $reader[0]; $powerHubName = $reader[1]; $polarity = $reader[2]; }` If I did not have the `$serial`, `$powerHubName` and `$polarity` in their own separate variable I know I could just do: `$serial | foreach-object { $_ } | foreach-object { $_ }` Does something like this exist in PowerShell? `$serial | foreach-object { $_ } | foreach-object { $_ }` I looked at this answer and it didn't help me much. How to collect multiple variables from a powershell script A: The powershell code you posted above returns the columns as a table and assigns them to variables named: `$serial` `$powerHubName` `$polarity` If you wanted to convert these to a `DataTable` object, you could do something like: `$command.CommandText = $sql; $reader = $command.ExecuteReader(); var $table = new-object DataTable; $reader.Read(); $table.Load($reader); foreach($serial in $table.columns) { foreach($powerHubName in $table.rows) { foreach($polarity in $table.rows) { # use these values here } } }` Many of the newer buffets have a service provided by waiters who remove dishes from the plates of the present diners. May 18, 2010 There are so many merits in writing the local cultural stories in the media. It contributes in building the national and cultural consciousness of the people of the Ilorin Emirate and as such can aid in enlightening the populace on the local cultural development. At the end of the day, there is a positive impact on the promotion of the culture in the Emirate. However, the practice, at best, is definitely not the panacea to preventing the dissolution of the culture in the Emirate. We have before us the first episode of this cultural adaptation which one would term as, "a digression", in this home to national cultural development in the Ilorin Emirate. As such, the listeners are reminded that in this edition of this serial "QFT", the true narrative of the development of the cultural life in the Ilorin Emirate will be told. The quest for positive transformation in the lives of the populace began in earnest at the time of the subsequent national assembly elections held in the Emirate in the year 2006, with the emergence and eventual victory of the Progressives Alliance and its leader, the Emir of Daura, Shehu Sani. Since then, the progress has been immense, but it is also obvious that much more needs to be done, still. In this edition, some eminent personalities within the cultural space in the Emirate were invited to vie for the coveted, Seagov 2004 Cultural Award. Shehu Sani was clearly the winner, as he is the only one who gave quality consideration to the other nominees. Apart from the rare-ness of it, the real significance of it is that the selection of the other nominees was purposeful and proactively geared towards forwarding the process of cultural development in the Ilorin Emirate, especially the youths. In that sense, the emergence of the “Pioneer Cultural Festival (PCF)”, which is now in its third year, was a wonderful avenue through which the denizens of the Ilorin Emirate can channel some culture in the youths. The selection of the theme is one of the things which should be commended. The theme for the 2010 edition of PCF was, “Communication Via Mass Media” and this is commendable. The fact that the theme is proactively directed towards the youths should be encouraged. We have always been constantly reminded that the youths are
