It was, quite probably, one of the most shocking moments of the season so far. Rory McIlroy jumped to the middle of the fairway with a flier on the par-5 15th at Augusta National in a bid to rescue a three-shot deficit. He drove the green from long range but chose instead to try to squeeze his wedge shot into the pin from 210 yards. The shot never came to fruition and McIlroy somehow managed to keep his head on his shoulders by parring for a ten-foot putt. It was one of a handful of amazing shots that McIlroy pulled off during an epic performance that included four birdies on the back nine to save a disastrous third round. The Irishman finished the day at 14-under 280 after a trio of tee shots to holes 17, 16 and 15 on the back nine meant he only had four holes left to try to complete his round. Despite that it was a crucial round in which McIlroy could have easily slipped further behind. He cut his deficit to four with five to play after a stellar 65.
