The present invention generally relates to methods and apparatus for determining the effective work function of a semiconductor device. More specifically, the present invention relates to methods and apparatus for determining the effective work function of a semiconductor device having a backside contact, such as a backside passivated semiconductor device. Continuing trends in semiconductor devices include high integration and miniaturization. As a result, the importance of making contacts on a semiconductor device, such as a backside passivated semiconductor device, as small as possible, and increasing the numbers of contacts on the backside passivated semiconductor device, is very important. Furthermore, the metallization of backside passivated semiconductor devices is becoming more and more difficult, as the depth and the aspect ratio (height/width) of the contacts increase. Accordingly, it is desirable to determine the effective work function of the semiconductor device as well as perform the metallization so that there are no open contacts on the semiconductor device. Cocoa Brownies A good friend of mine used to make these all the time. She called them Brownies, but you really can't call them anything but what the recipe calls them. The last time I asked her why she called them Brownies, she told me that when she was a child, her mother called them that and her father called them Brownies. She never really heard of Brownies being called Brownies (yeah, right), but was delighted that I remembered her childhood.
