VideoWorkLink Torrent Download is a tool designed to help coordinate projects and other work activities via live video, but while maintaining your privacy at the same time. The idea here is to create links for a video conference that you can send others and they decide whether or not to accept the video call.

The tool is lightweight on your system's resources and it consumes around 1% of 100 Mbps bandwidth for an average team of five members, according to the developer. A nice touch for the application stems from the fact that you start up blurred, so even though others can see that you are present, they cannot see what you are doing. When you are ready, simply use right click to unblur yourself and participate in the video call. In case the other participants to the conference want to unblur you, then the application sends a clear notification in this sense a few seconds before it happens.

Deceptively simple and handy, this application is going to save you a lot of time in your next conference call. It is similar to screen-sharing software, but with a much better implementation. An added bonus of this application is that it offers a lot of features such as video recording, one-to-one chat, video messaging and video conference call bridging. It is available for Windows and Mac as well. ScreenMe is a software utility that acts as a video screen sharer for Windows-based systems.

Keyboard Macro is a freeware application that allows you to define specific keyboard shortcuts. It is a multi-platform tool that works on Windows 7, 8, 10, MAC and Linux, but the application only has a Windows GUI. The developer released the full version of the software for a limited time, so you can now use KeyMacro with a 30-day evaluation period. The software is developed with the aim of letting users define keyboard shortcuts without leaving their favorite applications, with the default shortcuts defined. The application allows you to choose between two types of macros. The first, is a global macro that applies to the entire system, so it will work no matter what application you are in, or any time you run the application. To create a global macro, select the type of macro that you want to add, choose the name, and then click the Add button. Once you have created the macro, you can assign a shortcut to it from the options shown to the left panel, such as CTRL+A to select all text in the document, CTRL+X to cut the text, and CTRL+C to copy the text. The second type of macro is a key combination macro. This means that you can define a set of keystrokes that you want to use in any application. This is a different feature that can be a boon for power users or those who need to assign more than one shortcut to a keystroke.

This is similar to using the hot keys on a remote. So for example, you can assign CTRL+Z to undo and CTRL+Y to redo. All in all, if you have ever wanted to create your own hot keys, then you will find that the KeyMacro is a tool that lets you do this with ease. It is also worth mentioning that the free version has a 30-day evaluation period that you can use to make sure that the software works fine with your version of Windows. So if you want to know more, then all you need to do is try out the software for yourself. Goopper
