A ballasting tank is located above the pump and is fixedly attached to a collar around the pump and the distributor to stabilize the assembly above the distributor. A siphon assembly is connected to the pump inlet and is immersed in the liquid to be treated. U.S. Pat. No. 3,490,940 (Harlen) discloses a self-contained buoyant device for stabilizing a pipeline with at least a portion extending at least partially into a body of water. The device includes a plurality of floating support legs fixedly mounted to the pipeline in a spaced relation. A plurality of buoyancy tanks are each located on a respective leg. Each tank has a controllable air supply connected to it for maintaining a specified volume of air in the tank. U.S. Pat. No. 3,650,822 (Dunlap) teaches a self-contained buoyant underwater pipeline stabilizer device including a floating body and a plurality of spaced longitudinally extending legs depending from the body to a lower edge thereof.
