The script was written by JB Manley, "A movie is best to watch with theThe cytotoxic activity of indomethacin and the metabolism of the drug by cultured human placental cells. Indomethacin is an anti-inflammatory drug that induces the production of prostaglandins by placental tissues. This study tests whether the metabolic capacity of the placental cells is responsible for the production of prostaglandins. The extent of metabolic processes was assessed by measuring the conversion of the drug to indomethacin-7-oic acid by human term placental cells. Cultured human placental cells metabolize indomethacin to the conjugate of the latter drug and glyceryl ether of succinic acid. In contrast to rat placental cells, human placental cells generate large amounts of this conjugate in the culture medium. No further metabolism of the drug conjugate to acid or indomethacin was observed. Ligands of extracellular and intracellular receptors, prostaglandin E1 (PGE1) and indomethacin, respectively, were used to test the effect of the anti-inflammatory drug on the production of prostaglandins (PG) by placental cells. The cells, cultured in the presence of indomethacin, produced elevated levels of 595f342e71
