The overall aim of this Mentored Patient-Oriented Research Career Development Award proposal is to prepare the applicant for a career as an independent investigator in translational research in anxiety and bipolar disorder. The proposal builds on the applicant's strong research skills and background in both clinical and translational research. It will be completed under the mentorship of an expert team of researchers and clinicians with extensive experience in working with anxiety disorders and bipolar disorder. The proposal focuses on developing expertise in two areas of translational research relevant to the development of psychotherapies for anxiety and bipolar disorders: (1) treatments that target serotonin 5-HT_{2A} receptor (5-HT_{2AR}) mechanisms and (2) the effect of contextual fear conditioning on cortical 5-HT systems. The 5-HT_{2A}R is a potential target for pharmacotherapy in anxiety and mood disorders. However, to date, only 5-HT_{2A}R agonists have been investigated clinically and targeted for pharmacotherapy in anxiety or mood disorders. The proposed pilot studies will test the efficacy of a novel non-5-HT_{2A}R agonist in subjects with panic disorder and generalized anxiety disorder. The second approach will investigate a novel mechanism of action that may account for the findings on 5-HT_{2A}R agonists. Specifically, the applicant will test the hypothesis that CS history changes 5-HT_{2A}R function and excitability, and this effect may account for the beneficial treatment effects of 5-HT_{2A}R agonists on anxiety and depression. To achieve these two aims, the applicant will work with the appropriate experts in 5-HT_{2A}R physiology and function, pharmacology, anxiety disorder treatments, and contextual fear conditioning. This proposal is an excellent opportunity for the applicant to develop the skills and experience needed to obtain funding for a full-scale R-01 study in the future. PUBLIC HEALTH RELEVANCE: Anxiety and mood disorders are serious conditions with debilitating effects on the life of the individual and his or her family
